Develop a curriculum on child labour and child rights

Name:

Developing Childhood Unbound, a curriculum on child labour and child rights.

Description:

In 2021, Media Voices for Children pledges to create a nine-lesson high school curriculum to teach students about global child labor. The curriculum embeds online tools and best practices used by leaders in the field to combat it.

Implementation plan:

Lessons will be made available online via our teaching platform learnchildrights.org and feature interactive games, apps, projects, and video playlists. Lesson activities can be used independently to integrate across academic disciplines, or as a whole unit to give students a more comprehensive understanding.

Impact:

Designed to also guide educators unfamiliar with child labor, Childhood Unbound inspires both children and adults to use their power as writers, advocates, and agents of change to create a fairer world for all children.
